P R E F A C E

"Cradle of Northwest History," the slogan chosen by the city of Walla Walla, Washington, is also appropriate for the entire county with which it shares its name. The area became part of the United States when the northwestern boundary dispute with England was settled in 1846, and it was part of Oregon Territory when that government was organized in 1848. When Washington Territory was set off in 1853, the Walla Walla area was included. It was organized as a county by the legislature April 25, 1854, and at that time it included all of Washington east of the Cascade Mountains, all of what is now Idaho, and that part of Montana west of the Rockies and north of the forty-sixth parallel. Nineteen counties have since been set off from the original Walla Walla. The county assumed its present area when Columbia was separated from it in 1875. As a result, when the United States Census of 1880 was taken in Washington Territory, Walla Walla County was, in size and shape, just what it is today.

Walla Walla County's first white settlement was Old Fort Walla Walla, an outpost of the Hudson's Bay Company, founded in 1817 at the confluence of the Columbia and Walla Walla Rivers. Marcus Whitman, a pioneer missionary doctor, established a mission near the present site of Walla Walla in 1836, and it was there that a historical massacre took place in 1847. During that decade the mission had been a frequent stopping place for pioneers on a branch of the Oregon Trail.

The Indian Wars finally ended, and the town of Walla Walla was founded in 1859. Whitman College was established there the same year, the first institute of higher learning in the state. The town also boasts the first bank in the state and the first railroad in the Northwest.

The county is bounded on the northwest by the Snake River, on the east by Columbia County, on the south by the state of Oregon (Umatilla County), and on the southwest by the Columbia River. Other than the county seat, also named Walla Walla, the towns are quite small. They include Waitsburg, Prescott, Burbank, College Place, Lowden, Touchet, and Wallula.

This index to the 1880 Territorial Census was made from the microfilm records of the General Services Administration by members of the Tri-City Genealogical Society, which includes residents of Richland, Pasco, Kennewick, and Prosser, Washington. Most of the work was done by Evelyn Rice Roberts, and she was assisted by her husband Gene C. Roberts, Patricia Brisbois Adams, Frances Hansen Ehrig, and the late Leo L. Davis, M.D.

Names are printed in the index just as they appear to have been recorded in the original lists, with no attempt to modernize or standardize spelling. Whenever a letter could be interpreted in more than one way, the name was copied under both spellings and alphabetized both ways. The symbol (c) indicates that the individual was apparently Chinese, and that the census-taker probably spelled the name phonetically as best he could.

Page numbers refer to those stamped mechanically by the Federal Census Bureau, and not to those used by the various enumerators, since those are frequently repeated throughout the county. The enumerators divided the county into four districts: the city of Walla Walla, the town of Wallula, China Camp, and Waitsburgh, with most of the rural area attached to Waitsburgh (now spelled Waitsburg).
